

What Have Others Read? A Psychoanalytic Bibliography

Introduction

In December 2016 I submitted a query to multiple professional organizations², social media³, and personal and professional contacts. I asked clinicians for their choices of the Top 3 psychoanalytic articles, papers, or books.

A total of 135 people contributed 270 references. 112 contributors are based in the U.S. 43% of them work in Illinois, 22% in New York, and the rest across 16 other states. The majority of international contributors come from Europe and Latin America.

I hope this reading list is a useful resource for anyone interested in psychoanalytic theory and practice, and becomes a learning guide and an opportunity for discovery and exploration.

Caveats and Considerations

- For the most part this list is not curated, i.e., I have not judged whether a reference is “psychoanalytic enough”. They are listed as provided by the contributors, a group of diverse clinical experience.
- I have done my best to match the readings provided with actual titles, journals, dates, and publishing companies, but discrepancies are bound to happen. Please check the citations’ accuracy before using.
- I have only included titles in English or that have been translated to English. Suggested readings not translated to English are included in the “Additional Comments” section, on page 20.
- Every reference in this list includes one or more of the following elements:
 - For books (except Freud writings), links to the book’s page on WorldCat.org and on Amazon.com; in some cases, links to book reviews or sample chapters.
 - For journal articles and Freud writings, links to the corresponding page on Psychoanalysis Electronic Publishing (PEP) when available; in a few cases, links to the full article.
 - A number in brackets (e.g., “[2]”) indicates the number of people who suggested that title. If no number is included, that means the reading was suggested only by one person.
 - The notation “PEP Top 50!,” next to some journal articles, means that the article is one of the Top 50 most viewed articles on PEP during 2016 (see Top 50 PEP articles in Appendix C, on page 24).
 - Some references are followed by comments made by the person(s) who suggested those titles.
- I am neither familiar with nor can vouch for all the authors or titles included in this list. They are presented in the spirit of curiosity and collaboration.

² Email queries were sent to the Chicago Center for Psychoanalysis, the Chicago Association for Psychoanalytic Psychology, the American Association for Psychoanalysis in Clinical Social Work, and the American Group Psychotherapy Association.

³ A query was posted on two LinkedIn groups: International Psychoanalytical Association and The Psychology Network.

Additional comments from contributors:

- “All of Harold Searles and Thomas Ogden”
- “Virtually all of Winnicott”
- “Eda Goldstein and Carolyn Saari, any of their articles in the Clinical Social Work Journal”
- “Rose Marie Perez Foster and Neil Altman on culture and psychoanalysis”
- “Everything by Dan Siegel”
- “Most of Adam Phillips”
- “I have other books that I like especially anything by Dan Siegel, Susan Johnson, Dan Hughes and Bessel van der Kolk, but the books above are more psychoanalytic.”
- “I would heartily recommend the work of Nancy McWilliams and Marilyn Charles. All of Marilyn’s books are very much worthwhile.”
- “My current favorites are articles written by Kimberlyn Leary”
- “The work of David Tuckett”
